Their Married Life

Warren Agrees to Go to the Bells' For a Weekend and Then Upsets All Helen's Plans.

HELEN had been hoping that warren would say nothing this year about the yearly family party at Carrie's. Before old Mra Curtis had died Helen had endured a family party on almost every holiday, and now that warren't father was living with Carrie and Fred. Carrie had invariably thought it her duty to continue the custom. Carrie always made Haien feel that it was a duty and not a pleasure.

"Oh, Pd forgotten about it.' guesa." Warren remarked genially. "What de You want to do about it." I want to do about it." "Well, don't you think it would be a lovely the per in the fail. They have the dearest place, Warren, and the country air would be aplended for Winne for both of us and we do enjoy the Bella so much."

Warren remarked genially. "What de You want to do about it." "Well, don't you think it would be appear too eager. "It was lovely character in the fail. They have the dearest place, Warren, and the country air would be aplended for Winne for both of us and we do enjoy the Bella so much."

ways made Haien feel that it was a duty and not a pleasure.

Now that Winifred was growing older Helen felt more than ever, that Carrie's attitude of disapproval was bed for the child, and would be sure to facilize trouble of some kind. For was growing older, too, and was beginning to develop held tendencies that Helen did not like he had all of like helinds, with others added. He plays with boys who were older than he was, and his attitude toward Winifred savored of a botsifel patronage which Helen did not fancy.

When Carrie and Fred had been in shopping they had come up to the apartment for dinner one evening. Nor had been with them, and as a special favor Winifred had been allowed to sit up.

Just this once. Helen had come appearance of the sit up.

"Oh, what a basy, still sailing supper alone."

Haien had felt like boxing his ears, but Carrie had amiled instaigently, and had remarked acidly. "You do make a perfect little tenderfoot of hear, don't you Helen." Louding at Warren for commendation.

Halen did not know horself how she managed to get them all off for house without precipitating snything like a gourrel, and afterward she remembered with a thrill of exultation that nothing had been said about the yearly party.

Helen and Warren had been invited to the Bella and Helen had tonged to the total feels and tonged to the selle and Helen had tonged to intreduce this idea at some favorable time when, fartified by a good dinner and a cigar. Warren could be induced to accept. Then if he remembered afterward Helen could say that it was too late, as they had already accepted the invitation from the Bella. The prospect of a quiet week end in the sountry, with the channer for some chummy talks with Babble, and the leng quiet evening over the depen fire appealed to Helen. She did hope that hothing might happen to make Warren remember.

"Warren." she said one evening." "The affect this it fair to her not to go as usual."

"The affect clist.

"A you Carrie, how are you?" said Helen, her heart sinking.

"We're all fine, Say Helen, I called up to remind you of our yearly party.

"Why, we had forgotten about it, Carrie, said Helen, trying desperators the we're far the week end."

Physicians and druggists are einted over the fact that they have at last found a genuine and dependable remedy for colds, sore throat and is grippe. For years they have depended thiefly upon the old style calomal, which is certainly fine, but unfortunately many people would not take it because of its nauseating and dangerous qualities.

Now that the pharmaceutical chemists have perfected a nausealess calomel, called "Calotabs" whose medicinal virtues are vasily improved, the doctors and druggists are claiming that Calotabs are the ideal remedy to about a cold over night and out short an attack of sore throat or is grippe. They are also finding it most effective as the first step in the treatment of pheumonia.
